PARTY DOWN

WHITE HOUSE CORRESPONDENTS' DINNER, AS USUAL, A STAR-STUDDED AFFAIR

Bloomberg

"Fifty-one weeks a year, Washington is all about contention," said David Bradley, chairman of Atlantic Media Co., owner of National Journal and the Atlantic. "But for a blink of an eye each April, we seem to get along."

That's one effect of the White House Correspondents' Association Dinner and the parties around it. And with most of the festivities funded by media companies, an event that puts the president on the journalists' turf also turns into a branding and relationship-building exercise.

Bradley is having a dinner at his home Friday where invited guests include Siemens Corp. Chief Executive Eric Spiegel and Tanzanian Ambassador Mwanaidi Sinare.

Google Chairman Eric Schmidt and The Hollywood Reporter will co-host a fete on Friday at the W Hotel, while New Yorker editor David Remnick greets a literary crowd on the hotel's rooftop.

People magazine will host a Friday night party where actress Goldie Hawn and fashion designer Tory Burch are likely to make appearances.

Reese Witherspoon, Daniel Day-Lewis and Uggie, the dog in the film "The Artist," are expected to mingle with David Axelrod, President Obama's chief adviser; CIA Director David Petraeus; Defense Secretary Leon Panetta; Attorney General Eric Holder; and Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano.

MAIN EVENT

The main event is the Correspondents' Association Dinner on Saturday, drawing 2,700 guests to the Washington Hilton's ballroom. Jimmy Kimmel will roast the president, whose own speech, by tradition, pokes fun at the people in the room. Tables at the dinner are $2,500 a piece, with proceeds supporting scholarships for aspiring journalists. BLOOMBERG

A-LISTERS AND MORE

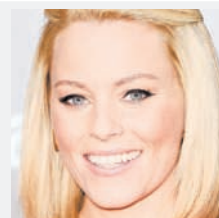

Lindsay Lohan will be in good company during Saturday's festivities. According to Politico, other celebrities expected to attend include:

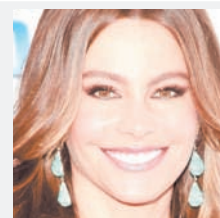

George Clooney

Josh Hutcherson

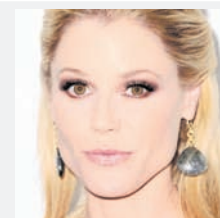

Elizabeth Banks

Do engagements have use-by dates?

Nikki Lynette

» redeye@tribune.com

Two weeks ago, I went to a friend's dinner party on North Avenue and ended up spending the evening socializing with a particularly pretty gal of his. When the conversation shifted to her recent engagement, the 23-year-old bride-to-be was absolutely glowing as she recalled the details of how her guy had proposed.

Maybe it's because I am a recording artist (or maybe I am just a closet commitment-phobe), but being tied down right now seems like a fate worse than death.

However, even I had to swoon when she showed us her super pretty, totally modern-looking engagement ring. I asked how long she had dated her fiancé before getting engaged, and she informed me that they had dated for two years. She then went on to tell me that what helped her decide to tie the knot was the fact that she knows a girl who has been with her guy for 12 years, and in spite of the fact that she wants to get married her man refuses to pop the question. She does not want to end up like that.

To be honest ... neither do I.

We all know that the divorce rate is high and marriage is hard and blah blah blah. The fact that the wedding industry has not gone belly up during these yucky economic times is proof that many people still believe in the institution of marriage.

What I would like to know is this: If you are dating someone and you are all in love and stuff, what is the maximum amount of time you are supposed to wait before you get married? I mean, I know the clock doesn't start ticking from the moment you meet a hot guy during Flywheel spin class, but once that hot guy graduates to boyfriend status, how long are you supposed to be together before it's time to put a ring on it?

I posed this question to my homies on Facebook and was surprised by the responses. While many of the girls said the length of time before getting engaged depends upon the relationship and the people in it (which I totally understand and agree with), most of the guys said something like, "A man knows if he can spend the rest of his life with a woman within about two years."

Wow. Does that mean that every girl who has been with her boyfriend for two years or more should take him to see "The Five-Year Engagement" this weekend and give him the stank eye during the whole movie until he realizes he's long overdue for a proposal?

At the dinner party, my friend's adorable lil' mom said she married her husband after dating for one year and being engaged for one year. Did you do the math? TWO YEARS! She told us, "You only have your youth for so long. Don't waste it."

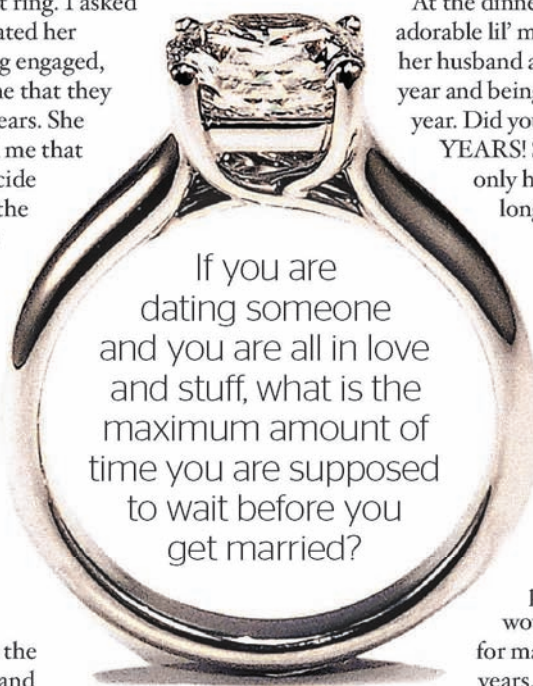

I have always believed that I have plenty of time for marriage later in life, but I bet the girl who has been with her guy for 12 years with no ring in sight thought the same thing. Yikes, right?

While some people (like me) would never be ready for marriage after only two years, when I finally meet Mr. Right, I will seriously consider my friend's mom's advice because she still is happily married after 30 years.

Maybe some of her Happy Marriage Swag will rub off on me.

'Operation Red Zone'

Federal officers to patrol government buildings in advance of NATO

Chicago Tribune

The streets around the city's downtown federal buildings will see a noticeable increase in security—including officers in battle dress—as early as next week as the city prepares for the NATO summit, set for May 20-21.

The Federal Protective Service, which secures federal buildings, this week informed tenants of the city's federal buildings that they would have personnel patrolling the streets as early as next week.

The officers were expected to be in battle dress and carrying non-lethal weapons, according to several sources who were not authorized to speak publicly.

In a memo titled "Operation Red Zone," the protective service said the increased security will be extended throughout the South Loop

CHICAGO POLICE STATEMENT

"The security perimeter and overall event plan are under the auspices of the United States Secret Service, with support from a variety of federal, state and local partners, including the Chicago Police Department. Federal Protective Services does not have a direct security role during the NATO summit. Federal Protective Services is in charge of securing their buildings, some of which are on or near-by the anticipated routes of permitted events such as parades and protests that will take place during the summit."

area often referred to as the federal complex. It includes the Kluczynski Federal Building, the U.S. Dirksen Courthouse and the Metropolitan Correctional Center. Several buildings just east on State Street also are in the so-called red zone.

The memo notes there have been no specific or credible threats at federal facilities "related to terrorism by international terrorist organizations" but that the area around the complex will be "directly and indirectly" affected by protests in the days before and after the summit.

The memo noted that there were two planned anti-war protests—one May 15 and one May 18—on the federal plaza in which upward of 1,000 participants were expected.

The memo warns that intersections and building entrances could be blocked during demonstrations. In the event of "demonstrated aggression," some areas could be temporarily shut down, according to the memo.

A protective service spokesman did not return phone calls Thursday.

Be calm: It's not monkey pox

Chicago Tribune

Passengers on a flight from Detroit were held aboard a plane at Midway Airport for more than two hours after a passenger was suspected of having monkey pox, officials said Thursday afternoon.

Spokeswoman Karen Pride said the Centers for Disease Control and the Chicago Department of Public Health were assisting with the plane, Delta flight 3163 from Detroit, which landed at 3:45 p.m.

Chicago Fire Department crews responded to the plane after the passenger's medical issue was reported.

A spokeswoman from the Federal Aviation Administration said an emergency was never called and the plane landed without incident.

The CDC was notified about the passenger who had a rash and had been to Africa, according to a CDC statement.

A family member of the passenger thought the rash may have been monkey pox, the statement said.

The passenger was evaluated by the Chicago Emergency Medical Services and officials determined the patient's symptoms and rash were not consistent with monkey pox, according to the statement.

The passenger was advised to seek medical care and the other passengers were released from the plane, officials said.

Chicago ranked sixth in a study of accessibility to public transportation in major cities.

HEATHER CHARLES/TRIBUNE

Chicago transit: Not so terrible?

Chicago Tribune

If you think catching a bus in Chicago is next to impossible, try living in Columbus, Ohio.

A study by Seattle-based WalkScore, a site that allows renters and home buyers to rate the walkability of a home's location, pitted major U.S. cities against one another in terms of accessibility to public transportation, ranking Chicago sixth with a score of 65 out of 100, behind New York; San Francisco; Boston; Washington, D.C.; and Philadelphia.

At the bottom of the heap: Sacramento, Calif.; Las Vegas; Columbus; and Raleigh, N.C.

A score of 70 or higher earned the honor of "excellent" transit. Chicago's score placed it in the "good transit" category with cities including Miami, Seattle and Baltimore.

To calculate the scores, WalkScore assigns a "usefulness" value to transit routes based on the frequency, type of route and distance to a route's nearest stop. City scores were calculated by applying the algorithm block-by-block throughout each city and weighting the scores by population density.

Americans took more than 10 billion trips on public transportation in 2011, according to the American Public Transportation Association. Chicagoans who use public transit instead of driving save an average of $1,004 a month, according a study released by the association last week.

HUDSON FAMILY KILLINGS

Trial shifts to past relationships

By Tracy Swartz

REDEYE

Both Jennifer Hudson and William Balfour saw their exes testify Thursday in the trial of Balfour—accused of killing Hudson's mother, brother and nephew.

Hudson, who was wearing a skirt and wearing her hair in loose waves, watched as her ex-boyfriend James Payton testified that Hudson's brother, Jason Hudson, sold drugs for a living. Jennifer Hudson stayed through all testimony Thursday, a departure from previous days when she left while autopsy photos of her family were shown in court.

Meanwhile, Diana Grant testified that she met Balfour in 2007 and gave him her phone number.

She said she didn't know at the time Balfour was married to Jennifer's sister Julia, and after she did, she continued a romantic relationship with him. Grant said she was with Balfour on Oct. 23, 2008, the night before the killings.

Invasion of the cannibal shrimp!

An invasion of giant cannibal shrimp into America's coastal waters appears to be getting worse. Researchers from the U.S. Geological Survey and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration reported Thursday that sightings of the massive Asian tiger shrimp, which can eat their smaller cousins, were 10 times higher in 2011 than in 2010.

Norwegians raised their voices in unison on Thursday to get under the skin of admitted mass killer Anders Behring Breivik. Secret Service face new claims 4 WASHINGTON A U.S. government official familiar with the Secret Service acknowledged Thursday that agents have made missteps in the past but was quick to defend the government's internal review process.

"We have had employees that have engaged in misconduct," the official said. "People make mistakes."

He said it's to be expected, given the 147-year history of the Secret Service. He said the Secret Service Office of Professional Responsibility dealt with the previous matters.

The official's comments come amid new reports of Secret Service misconduct. A day after U.S. lawmakers were briefed on an alleged prostitution scandal in Colombia involving Secret Service members, a report emerged Thursday

OFFICIAL RESPONSE

Responding to the KIRO report, Secret Service spokesman Edwin Donovan said, "The recent investigation in Cartagena [Colombia] has generated several news stories that contain allegations by mostly unnamed sources. Any information brought to our attention that can be assessed as credible will be followed up on in an appropriate manner."

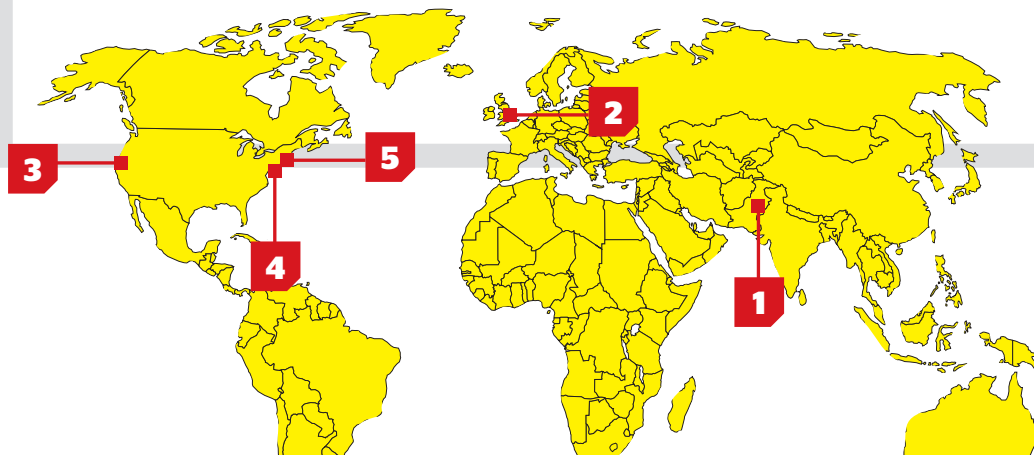

of similar allegations, this time in El Salvador.

Seattle TV station KIRO cited an unnamed U.S. government contractor who worked extensively with the Secret Service advance team in San Salvador prior to President Obama's trip there in March 2011.

MODERN INTELLIGENCE FOR A MEAN ECONOMY

JUST ASKING

When it comes to financial stuff, the thought-bubble above your head might contain more question marks than you'd care to admit—questions so basic you hesitate to mention them. We get it. We feel the same way. Hence, our dumb question of the week.

—TONY PEREGRIN FOR REDEYE

What's the difference between a PPO and an HMO?

Sorting through health insurance alphabet soup can be confusing, particularly when it comes to figuring out the difference between a Preferred Provider Organization plan (PPO) and a Health Maintenance Organization plan (HMO). Both PPOs and HMOs create a "network" of participating doctors and hospitals. With an HMO, you pick a primary doctor who will give you basic care (if you think you have strep throat, for example) and refer you to specialists (such as dermatologists, podiatrists, etc.) if you need one. Compared to a PPO, you fill out less paperwork (no filing claims) and you will generally pay less out-of-pocket as long as you stay in network. But your options are limited, and you typically will pay more, if you decide to go to out of your "network" for care. With a PPO, you'll pay more out-of-pocket and have more paperwork to complete. But PPOs tend to have larger networks that include more doctors and hospitals, and you don't need referrals from your primary doctor to see a specialist. Getting care out-of-network is generally easier than it is with HMOs too.

Generally, online budgeting falls into three categories: software that pulls numbers straight from your bank, software that doesn't, and spreadsheets. Here's the best from each category. Mint.com is the big daddy of budgeting websites, and that reputation is well-deserved.

Mint feeds right from your various bank and loan accounts, so you don't have to enter in your spending by hand. It lets you set certain goals and limits in different targeted areas. It's easy to navigate, and you can use it as much or as little as you want. And did I mention it's so, so pretty? It's got this day-spa color scheme that makes you think of pink roses and lemonade even while you're freaking out about your credit card debt. That's quite a perk. It's not often that the prom queen is also voted Most Likely to Succeed—you catch my drift?

Now, just because some sites get your financial numbers directly from your bank account doesn't mean they're going to post all your financial info out there willy-nilly. Mint, in particular, is owned by Intuit—the Quicken company—and it has a serious interest in keeping your stuff private; it'd be a PR nightmare if its accounts leaked. But if you aren't comfortable coughing up your online banking info, that's fine too. Try a site like budgetpulse.com. You enter your own figures, set your own goals and go from there. Just be honest with yourself about the numbers and you'll be spending sensibly in no time.

So if you want to really just get in there and crunch the numbers on your own, you're going to want to keep a spreadsheet. It's old school, I know, but hey, some of you just like to see exactly where your numbers are coming from. You probably bake your own bread too. No judgment. It's also nice because you can try different sheets without having to commit, and see what works for you. Google Docs has a ton; look, I've even made you a handy link! Check it: bit.ly/az4Jkh.

LIL' JOHN

THE BULLS' SMALLEST PLAYER HAS HAD A BIG IMPACT THIS SEASON

By Bryan Crawford

FOR REDEYE

John Lucas III's basketball career—not just his NBA career—has taken him all over the world. He's played in major cities and in obscure locales many people have never even heard of and couldn't find on a map.

His latest stop is in the Windy City, where he's become a Bulls fan favorite. And Lucas is keenly aware of what it means to wear a jersey with block letters spelling out "Chicago" and "Bulls" on the front and the fans' expectations of the players who wear it.

"When you put that Bulls jersey on, there's a lot of responsibility that comes with that and I don't want to disrespect or let anybody down by not playing as hard as I can," he told RedEye after practice Monday.

In other words, John Lucas III "gets it."

His play on the court has proved it. Especially when the Bulls have needed him most.

The condensed, hectic, nearly practice-free 66-game NBA schedule this season had players dropping like flies across the league. But no team was been bitten by the injury bug more than the Bulls—and at arguably the most critical and most crucial position on the floor, no less: point guard.

Reigning MVP Derrick Rose missed 26 games with a variety of ailments, most recently a sprained ankle. And Rose's backup, C.J. Watson, missed 17 games with a left elbow sprain.

But the Bulls never missed a beat with those guys out, and they have Lucas to thank for that.

"I just wanted to come in and be there for my team like they've been there for me for the past two years," said Lucas, whose dad is former NBA player and coach John Lucas. "This atmosphere we have—this chemistry we have as a team, this unity—we all think of each other as brothers, and when one brother goes down, it's time for the next one to step in and pick up where he left off.

"That's just been my mentality, and plus I love the game of basketball. When you get an opportunity to play, you're gonna want to make the most of it."

Making the most of his opportunities has earned Lucas praise from his teammates and coach Tom Thibodeau.

"He's been terrific all year, and it doesn't surprise me," said Thibodeau, an NBA coach of the year candidate. "He's been around the game a long time, and wherever he's been, he's always excelled; whether it was the D-League, overseas or Summer League. He's a great worker, a great practice guy, and he stays ready. I always felt confident that if we had an injury or had to plug him in that he would play well and have the team play well."

Carlos Boozer, who's started every game this season, said Lucas has not only played well but probably saved the Bulls on a few occasions.

"He's been one of the biggest surprises for us this season," Boozer said. "Obviously we've had D-Rose out for 20-plus games and C.J.'s been out, too. But Luke has done a great job of hitting big shots for us in fourth quarters, and he's probably had four or five games where he's really won the game for us."

Case in point, the Bulls first home game against rival Miami on March 14 at the United Center.

Lucas shot 9-of-12 from the field and connected on three of his five 3-point attempts, finishing with 24 points off the bench. But the lasting memory from that game was the 5-foot-11 Lucas going one on one against 6-8 LeBron James and nailing a key step-back jump shot over the King that proved to be the dagger in the ballgame.

It served as Lucas' coming-out party.

"The fans didn't really know that much about me, but I had to show them that this is what I bring to the table. This is what I bring to this team," Lucas said of that game.

The Bulls likely won't need Lucas to repeat such heroics in the playoffs, but if they do call on him, he's ready.

"I play hard for everybody, not just for my teammates," Lucas said. "I play hard for the fans, for the coaching staff, for the organization."

ROUNDUP OF PLAYOFF NEWS AND NOTES

Meet the Iron Men

With Kyle Korver sitting out Thursday's game, Carlos Boozer, Ronnie Brewer and Omer Asik became the only Bulls to play in every game of the season. That was a career first for Boozer and Brewer. "I'm proud of that," Boozer said.

Rose rested, ready

Derrick Rose didn't play in Thursday's season finale, and coach Tom Thibodeau said it was just for "maintenance purposes. For his part, Rose said he's healthy.

"The swelling is done," Rose said of his right foot and ankle issues. "I should be ready for the playoffs. I'm just trying to play in a groove. I'm not rushing anything coming off picks. I'm trying to make plays for other people. Our chemistry is good."

The White Mamba speaks

Before Thursday night's game with Cleveland began, Brian Scalabrine addressed the fans at the United Center. He thanked them for their support throughout the regular season and gave them a pep talk of sorts for the postseason.

"The playoffs are about to begin, and we're going to need you, every possession, every game, every series," he said. "We're going to need you. ... We're going to do it. It's going to start this Saturday, and we're going to do it together."

1 What's your first-round playoff prediction for the Bulls?

Bulls sweep the series despite losing Derrick Rose to a bad haircut.

They win the series 4-2 and somehow rack up more power play goals than the Blackhawks.

Nothing short of complete and total world and groin domination.

Bulls in 3. You heard me.

A seven-game adjustment period for the starters to get to know one another.

2 Describe John Lucas III's season in three words.

He was ready.

Get some, LeBron!

March 14 FOREVER!

March 14 ruled.

3 What would reaching 50 wins this season mean for the Bulls?

Nothing.

They level up to a Reggie Theus hologram at shooting guard.

A free sundae? It don't mean a thing if you ain't got that bling.

Crushing disappointment after last year's 62 wins.

It's like winning 62 games in a regular season.

4 What would be your first offseason move for the Blackhawks?

Leave a horse's head in Raffi Torres' bed.

They have to do something about faceoffs if they have to bring in Castor Troy.

Get Dustin Byfuglien back! They need size and rage.

Either sign Cory Schneider or drive up his price for the Canucks.

Trading Patrick Kane. Stats over cuteness, people.

5 How did Paul Konerko celebrate hitting his 400th homer?

He handed the ball to a weeping Jerry Reinsdorf in a public ceremony.

Big. Hurt. Beer.

By trotting reeeeeeaaally sloooowly around the bases.

He's just now rounding third, actually.

By watching Brent Lillibridge get picked off second. Disgusting.

BULL RUN

WHIZZER'S CRYSTAL BALL REVEALS WHAT'S IN STORE FOR BULLS

whizzer

» redeyesports@tribune.com

It's up to you, Bulls.

After the Blackhawks fizzled out like LeBron James in the fourth quarter, Chicago sports fans are counting on the Bulls to make a deep playoff run to help them forget the debacle on ice.

Well, I've got good news for you, Bulls fans.

The future looks bright for the Bulls this postseason. That's what my prognosticating powers are telling me, at least. And, no, this is not a good time to remind me I picked the Blackhawks to beat the Coyotes in six games. My mind was clouded from a day of chasing squirrels in Grant Park.

Speaking of Grant Park, we might see the Bulls there again soon. But I'm getting ahead of myself.

There's the matter of the first round of the NBA playoffs to take care of first.

Here now, my picks.

Bulls vs. Philadelphia

This is not a drill, Bulls fans. This is the real thing. No more worrying about days off, maintenance or playoff positioning—unless you're talking about where I'm lying to watch the game.

The Madhouse on Madison should be rocking for this one, and Derrick Rose and Co. will come out on fire. Not literally, that would be a tragedy. Like the time I inadvertently got my tail stuck in the RedEye office's ceramic space heater. But I digress. Bulls cruise, 76ers lose.

BULLS 91, 76ERS 80

(Bulls lead series 1-0)

Bulls vs. Philadelphia

Hey, Evan Turner, you still think you match up better with the Bulls? Rose thinks not, as he drops a triple-double on you. Carlos Boozer doesn't either, as he screams in your face "AND ONE!" Nor does Kyle Korver, who spills Hot Sauce all over you. In other words, your bulletin board statement was not wise. Drive home safely, beep-beep.

BULLS 99, 76ERS 79

(Bulls lead series 2-0)

Bulls at Philadelphia

In the City of Brotherly Love—that's weird when you think about it, no?—the Bulls continue to show no love for Philly. Andre Iguodala tries to keep the 76ers in this, but it's the Rip Hamilton show in this one. He's getting hot at just the right time, Bulls fans.

BULLS 82, 76ERS 75

(Bulls lead series 3-0)

GAME 4

Bulls at Philadelphia

This one gets out of hand, like many close-out games do. In the end, the 76ers didn't have the firepower or the heart to hang with the Bulls.

Bonus: Because of the huge lead they establish, the Bulls rest Rose, Luol Deng and Carlos Boozer for a good part of the fourth quarter. On to the next one ...

BULLS 87, 76ERS 73

(Bulls win series 4-0)

ROSE IS NO. 1

RedEye

Again this season, Derrick Rose has done something in the NBA he's never done before. Rose led the league in jersey sales this season, the NBA announced Thursday. That honor is based on sales at nbastore.com and at a temporary NBA Store on Fifth Avenue in New York City. Here are the top five.

Give the WWE a chance—again

When's the last time you watched pro wrestling? Maybe it was randomly on at a friend's house, or late one night in college. There's probably a better chance that the last time you saw it was when you were a little kid.

I'd like to implore you to change that habit.

Boxing is a shell of its former self, and UFC can be hit-or-miss, depending on the card. (Did I mention former UFC heavyweight champ Brock Lesnar is wrestling again?) This Sunday, the WWE (you may remember it as the WWF) rolls into

WWE 'Extreme Rules'

6:45 p.m. Sunday, Allstate Arena town for a pay-per-view called "Extreme Rules," and it provides a pretty good jumping-on point for the whole mishegas. I say you go check it out (the event is sold out, but select bars in the city will show it, or you can order it).

While you're watching, here are a few things you should keep an eye on.

» Brody Clay: Remember the Chris Farley Chippendales sketch from "Saturday Night Live"? Yeah, imagine that, but then add two smoking-hot ladies and a little person. That = his entrance. Worth the price of admission alone.

» CM Punk: The current WWE champ is so Chicago it hurts. How so? He lives here, will sing "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" at Wrigley in May and wears the Chicago stars on his trunks. Currently feuding with Chris Jericho (whom you've probably seen on shows like "I Love the '90s"). They're going to tear the house down. Support your own.

» The crowd: Wrestling crowds are always the X-factor at a PPV. You'll hear interesting chants, see some ridiculous signs and be entertained the whole time.

» Daniel Bryan: He looks like a Groupon employee but is secretly one of the three best wrestlers on Earth right now. Fun tip: Take a drink every time he says "yes." Sorry in advance for the hangover.

» The main event: The aforementioned Lesnar is making his WWE return after being away since 2002. He's taking on current golden boy John Cena, and the match will either be decent or a train wreck. UFC fans, this one's for you.

Anyway, all I'm saying is give wrestling a chance. I'll see you Sunday.

Great dynasty. I blinked and missed it.

So long, Black-hawks. Since winning Lord Stanley's Cup, you've won zero playoff series. That's one less than one. In two seasons.

Um, changes please. Our stars didn't show up. Our kids played well but not well enough, and our goalies are good, not great.

Someone has got to go, and I vote for one of the Patricks. Sharp or Kane—you choose, Stan Bowman. Maybe trade some of those kids for a stud goalie. Not a major blow-up. Just a tweaker. And be careful. The further out we get from the title, the more people will love the Bulls first.

The Bulls. Derrick Rose, meet Rip Hamilton. Rip, this is Derrick. You two will be playing together in the postseason along with the rest of the so-called starters. The coveted No. 1 seed. It means so much, doesn't it? I don't know, I'm asking. It meant a lot until we lost to the Miami Heat last year. Just sayin'.

I'm also just sayin' this. There's something going on on the South Side. Look, I know it's early, only April. But the Sox starters can be lights-out. And that's one through five. So, thank you Don Cooper, for the rehab job on Philip Humber.

I just have one request. Can we find the Don Cooper for hitters and bring him here as well? Because Brent Morel and Gordon Beckham are broken. Broken as in "I can't watch them anymore" broken. They may never see .200 again!

I'm not saying the Sox are even close to the best in the AL, but man, that pitching. Kenny, you might have a problem later on. You may have to make a trade or two, and actually go for it again, and you thought you were done with that! Sorry, good pitching. It'll get you.

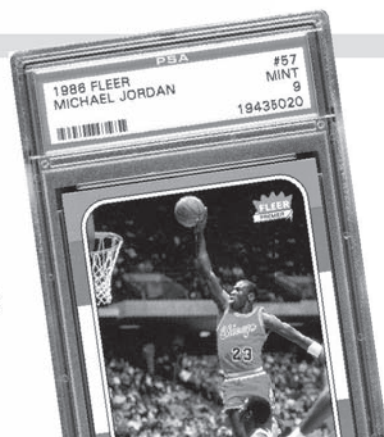

That's assuming Jake Peavy's arm doesn't fall off. Huge assumption. Huge. And Gavin Floyd, knock it off with the Javier Vasquez imitation. Unless you like being a .500 pitcher. What? I didn't think so.

Not bad for a rebuilding year. Just like the Cubs. They're rebuilding and they're unwatchable.

See, Kenny, that's how you're supposed to rebuild. BAG BOY IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

5 QUESTIONS FOR CUSACK

Chicago-area native son John Cusack answers our Windy City-related questions. r.s.

If you could take the “Hot Tub Time Machine” back to a certain year and place in Chicago, where would it be?

Definitely places I’ve already been, because I’ve lived through some of the best history in Chicago. All the times the Cubs won the division before the wild card; those were unbelievable times in Chicago. The ‘85 Bears, the golden era ... I was here for Jordan’s glorious reign. The music scene back then, I really loved it. Great times.

As a Chicago native, how has the city changed for you over the years?

It still feels like the same place to me, in a great way. There’s still 4 a.m. bars; the Green Mill is still here. I mean, some of them have moved on and there are fewer of the local coffee shops and more Starbucks. ... I’m not sure about the new scoreboard in Wrigley. I love what those guys are doing, but that made me go, “Wait a minute ...” But I guess I’ll have to see it in person.

Cusack attends a White Sox-Cubs game
GETTY IMAGES

Is it tough to be a Chicago baseball fan these days?

Not with the White Sox. It looks like [manager] Robin [Ventura] has those guys on a good start. I think they’ll surprise people this year. With the Cubs, it’s too early to tell.

Do you still get crap for being a fan of both the Cubs and Sox?

Totally. But I can’t help it, I legitimately like both. I mean, when I made “Eight Men Out,” I wore the Sox colors. But growing up, I’d watch Brickhouse on WGN and loved Harry Caray on Channel 32. I remember the Southside Hitmen, I’d watch box scores of both teams every day. I remember it all.

If you could play a role of a real-life person from Chicago, who would it be?

That’s a big one. Maybe [community organizer and author] Saul Alinsky. He was pretty cool, pretty crazy. ... I just said that to piss off the right people.

STARK 'RAVEN'

Evanston's John Cusack isn't quite himself in his 'Godfather of Goth' role

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEYE

John Cusack claims to have little in common with Edgar Allan Poe.

But clad in an all-black outfit and answering questions thoughtfully between long drags of a cigarette in a lonely room deep in the bowels of McCormick Place during the recent Chicago Comic and Entertainment Expo, Cusack could be a contemporary update of the tormented author whose Victorian-style cape the actor dons in "The Raven," opening Friday. That is, if he still had the jet-black goatee he grew for the role.

"It was really itchy," Cusack said.

Cusack could be describing his own career in film when talking about the oeuvre of Poe, whose serious essays, critical writing and satires were massively overshadowed in popularity by his bloody short stories such as "The Pit and the Pendulum" and "The Tell-Tale Heart."

"He's a mixture of the high esoteric ... this intellectual acumen and sophistication with some pop sensibilities," Cusack said of the 19th century author.

That sentence rings just as true for the 45-year-old Evanston native, who mixes eclectic work in quirky indie fare such as "Being John Malkovich" and "War, Inc." with crowd-pleasing roles in popcorn films where he survives doomsday Mayan prophesies ("2012"), makes grand romantic gestures with boom boxes ("Say Anything"), and takes a dip in a "Hot Tub Time Machine."

"The Raven," meanwhile, lies somewhere in the middle ground between art-house biopic and Hollywood-style thriller. The film is set in 1840s Baltimore during the last days of Poe's life, in which he was found in a poor state of health and babbling incoherently on the streets. He mysteriously died soon afterward in a hospital at age 40.

Director James McTeigue ("V for Vendetta") takes material that could have been made into a period-piece costume drama and transforms it into a hodge-podge of horror/mystery/biopic meta-narrative. "The Raven" reimagines Poe's final days as the setting for a fictional murder mystery in which a serial killer uses Poe's macabre stories as the backdrop for his killings. A young detective named Emmett Fields (Luke Evans) reluctantly enlists the author's help in solving the case and Poe gets pulled into the mix further when someone close to him becomes the murderer's next target.

"It seemed like a good way to tell the story, Poe getting caught in one of his own stories," Cusack said. "It's always nice to talk about real-life subject matter in a different way because biopics can be really boring."

For Cusack, there was little boring about playing Poe, whom he calls "The Godfather of Goth" and credits for inventing the horror genre of entertainment.

A detective named Emmett Fields (Luke Evans) reluctantly enlists Edgar Allan Poe's help in solving a murder mystery.

"You can see his tentacles so many places in the culture," the actor said. "The abyss is kind of romantic, and Poe knew it and people like Kurt Cobain knew it. He was the perpetual orphan of the world, a blasted soul, wandering around graveyards and stuff. People can relate to that freakish iconography; we all know we have the same things in us. He's the Patron Saint of the Doomed, and that's a pretty cool character."

But taking on Poe also was a big challenge for Cusack; the author's hotheadedness and darkness are a sharp contrast from the actor's unflappably cool demeanor.

"It was definitely a challenge, but actors and artists, they take what's inside of them and pull in their own fears and vanities and put it in a new form," he said. "Poe was sort of a vain guy, so ... I mean some of the stuff you have to draw on isn't very pleasant, you know?"

Poe always seems to be near a bottle of hard liquor in the film, but Cusack admitted he didn't need to go on a bender to understand that part of the character. "I've been on enough of them in my own life in the past to know what that's like," he said.

Cusack isn't quite done playing temperamental alleged alcoholics from American history. He's slated to portray former President Richard Nixon in "The Butler," a film about a White House butler who served eight consecutive presidents.

His approach to that role?

"I haven't figured it out yet. We're still working on it," Cusack recently told vulture.com. "You can never really do one definitive thing on a person. Not one movie, or even one novel can really sum up a person—it's just one angle."

The Raven
R

When a thriller features an author famous for a story about an incessantly beating heart, the movie has no excuse not to make viewers' chests pound too. Sadly, "The Raven" turns a fictionalized take on the last days of Edgar Allan Poe's (John Cusack) life into a routine investigation of a serial killer, albeit one modeling his work after Poe's writing. "I believe the killer is taunting us," says Detective Fields (Luke Evans), since that's what detectives always say in this situation. Never a suspect but seen as a valuable asset to the case, Poe aims to find the murderer and protect his fiancée (Alice Eve), who's helpless in the face of her man's romantic way with words.

John Cusack in 'The Raven'

Cusack struggles to present the arrogant author as both a tortured genius and a credible investigator—thank you, writers, for avoiding a terrible joke about the Poelice—while director James McTeigue ("Ninja Assassin") fares better with images of a head tilted slightly off the neck, rather than gruesome "Saw"-like torture devices. People do like the gory ones, Poe's editor (Kevin McNally) points out, but "The Raven" grinds along without the craft or the shocking powers of its subject. Given the option, you'd skip to the end, read the last few pages and move along.

Considering he always does a competent, virtually identical combination of transporting and ass-kicking, Jason Statham never deserves blame for movies that routinely function as well as a construction crew that works blindfolded. Nor does the action hero warrant particular praise on the rare occasion one of his brain dissolvers delivers actual fun, rather than just a literal or theoretical death race.

In "Safe," Statham plays Luke, another thug with a heart of gold in yet another story of Russian goons and Chinese goons and corrupt cops and you should have already stopped caring by now. Luke's attempt to protect 11-year-old, super-intelligent Mei (Catherine Chan) recalls the 1998 Bruce Willis-protects-a-code-breaking-boy-with-autism vehicle "Mercury Rising," a movie I didn't see but occupied myself trying to remember while Luke was busy punching and shooting in the many sub-standard action sequences writer-director Boaz Yakin coughs up between lines like "Let's go to war."

None of this trash deserves to lick the boots of other movies capable enough to be called average.

'Freeway' the dog in
'Darling Companion'

Can't really blame the dog for running away

My wife and I just adopted my in-laws' 7-year-old dog, an extremely lovable miniature dachshund named Rosie. I am exactly the right person to find warmth in "Darling Companion," in which Beth (Diane Keaton) rescues a 7-year-old dog from the side of a snowy Colorado road. A year later, the dog runs off when Beth's husband Joseph (Kevin Kline), a self-absorbed spine surgeon, pays more attention to the person on the other end of his cellphone than the pooch, dubbed Freeway, sprinting after a deer.

Except director/co-writer Lawrence Kasdan ("The Big Chill") neglects to develop the bond between Beth and Freeway. Don't just say "One year later," show the ol' guy growing to love and comfort his new mom. Instead, Kasdan, who wrote the script with his wife, Meg, skips ahead to the human shenanigans between Beth and Joseph, as well as Joseph's sister Penny (Dianne Weist) and her loopy boyfriend Russell (Richard Jenkins). The latter couple plans to open an English pub in Omaha, Neb., an idea that shows as much common sense as Penny's son Bryan (Mark Duplass) falling for the self-described gypsy (Ayelet Zurer of "Angels and Demons") whose visions attempt to lead the group to their lost, four-legged family member.

Movie characters don't always have to be likable, but the loose-yet-uptight "Darling Companion" comes populated not with appealingly flawed folks but a group of people we're unpleasantly forced to put up with. Kasdan wants to tap into a family working out the kinks, and occasionally the film articulates the finesse it sometimes takes to keep bonds from fraying. Mostly, though, the movie drifts without blossoming, leaning on goofy scenes such as Joseph yelping to ward off rams or Russell proving his worth in the face of a grizzled mountain man that feel desperate instead of revealingly funny.

This ponderous dramedy should make you want to sit and stay; I kept wanting to say to these irritating characters, "No barking!"

Typercasting doesn't get much more obvious than when a star, in this case Salma Hayek, can't even play a non-sexy role in an animated film. Not to mention a

Burger King commercial.

In "The Pirates! Band of Misfits," Hayek voices the most seductive of the 19th century scoundrels aiming to win Pirate of the Year, a prize awarded to whoever collects the most booty. Since the film comes from Aardman Animation (the British studio behind "Wallace and Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit" and last year's "Arthur Christmas"), "Pirates" offers blissfully fewer innuendoes about "sparkling booty" than might be found in an American animated effort, or your average Kim Kardashian mall appearance.

However, this 3-D comedy also delivers more smiles than laughs and a fast-moving but underwhelming story that runs aground early. For 20-some years, the Pirate Captain's (voiced by Hugh Grant) dreams of winning Pirate of the Year receive a beating from more accomplished brutes like Black Bellamy (Jeremy Piven), who conquers whales while the Pirate Captain misguidedly tries to plunder boats possessing only kids or ghosts. Once the Captain stumbles upon Charles Darwin (David Tennant), who's equally concerned with scientific achievement and his lack of a girlfriend, the pirate learns that a few deceptions and moral compromises may be all it takes to net him the prize he so persistently desires.

!!! The Pirates! Band of Misfits PG

The claymation visuals look fantastic, providing delight even when what's happening on screen sags from a script (by first-time feature screenwriter Gideon Defoe) that saves too many of the best jokes for later. Nevertheless, as long as Johnny Depp and Disney insist on cranking out a constant stream of bloated, senseless "Pirates of the Caribbean" films, a movie about pirates that's quick and painless counts as an improvement.

'The Pirates! Band of Misfits' opens Friday.

Yar! 'Pirates!' fuels stop-motion love

Los Angeles Times

The Pirate Captain, the lead swashbuckler voiced by Hugh Grant in the new stop-motion animated film "The Pirates! Band of Misfits," possesses some spectacular facial hair. It was the latter that kept the filmmakers up at night. Model makers labored for months to find a natural way to animate the rubber whiskers, eventually fashioning a mechanism out of the tuning head of a guitar to make the beard spring to life.

That kind of handcrafted solution is typical of films made using the homespun medium of stop-motion animation. For a technique first developed before talkies, stop-motion is surprisingly current: In addition to "Pirates," which opens Friday, there are three more stop-motion films due in U.S. theaters this year.

"Pirates," co-directed by Peter Lord and Jeff Newitt and adapted from a novel by Gideon Defoe, is the most logistically ambitious stop-motion film to come out of Aardman Animations, the studio in Bristol, England, behind "Chicken Run" and "Wallace and Gromit," as well as last year's computer-animated holiday film, "Arthur Christmas."

Stop-motion is a notoriously arduous process that requires animators to manipulate a puppet's movement frame-by-frame—a typical pace for the 33 animators on "The Pirates!" was to shoot only six seconds of footage a week. But the result can be a lifelike contrast to the shiny perfection of CGI. According to Lord, who co-founded Aardman with David Sproston in 1972 to produce short films and advertising spots, it's precisely that imperfection that is keeping stop-motion, or "stop-frame," as he calls it, alive.

Stop-motion dates to the earliest movies, where it was often used as a special effect in live action productions, like the skyline-stomping "King Kong" in 1933. Many viewers' first experience with stop-motion animation was in children's TV, either through the claymation series "Gumby" or the Rankin/Bass Christmas specials such as "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer." The first feature-length stop-motion animated film to garner a wide release was "The Nightmare Before Christmas," the spooky 1993 musical fantasy directed by Henry Selick and produced by Tim Burton that has endured as a cult hit, with Disney re-releasing it in 3-D every Halloween since 2006.

"Every kid has a toy that they believe is their best friend, that they believe communicates with them, and they imagine it being alive, their toy horse or car or whatever it is," said Selick, whose new animation studio Cinderbiter is currently in production on an as-yet-untitled stop-motion film for Disney from a former chocolate factory in San Francisco. "Stop-motion is the only medium where we literally can make a toy come to life, an actual object. While it will never be super-slick and shiny like other types of animation, it does reconnect an audience with those primal feelings."

Director John Stockwell has managed to do the near impossible: He made a movie with Halle Berry and a bunch of man-eating sharks appear about as exciting as a kid's wading pool. Slow pacing and a script that drips with stereotypes further sinks this sea-going tale. Berry's character is called "the shark whisperer" because of her ability to swim with the watery beasts without a cage. A tragic incident has stopped her whispering, but she gets lured back to the ocean by her ex-boyfriend and a businessman with more money than common sense. Needless to say, things go bad. But it takes so long for the bad stuff to happen that the audience gets bored and just doesn't care. —RICK BENTLEY, THE FRESNO BEE

Contraband R

Mark Wahlberg plays a former smuggler who has to take up his old trade; the cast also includes Kate Beckinsale, Ben Foster and a thoroughly creepy Giovanni Ribisi. I liked the grubbiness of it, and the selective use of action (while promos for the movie suggested something faster and slicker)—although it still manages to get in gunplay, chases, fights and explosions. But it falters at the end, which seems to come from a much different kind of movie.

Extras: Making-of piece, deleted scenes and an audio commentary by producers Baltasar Kormakur (who also directed) and Evan Hayes. —RICH HELDENFELS, AKRON BEACON JOURNAL

Titanic NR

Writer Julian Fellowes has an Oscar (for his screenplay for "Gosford Park") and Emmys (for "Downton Abbey") but that was not apparently impressive to ABC, which buried the Fellowes-scripted miniseries "Titanic" on a recent weekend. Ratings were low. But you have another chance to see it when it is released in a Blu-ray/DVD combo pack. Like much of Fellowes' previous work, "Titanic" deals with a large group of characters and class distinctions, with a solid cast on-screen. Extras: Six making-of featurettes and others. —RICH HELDENFELS, AKRON BEACON JOURNAL

The classic hamburger at Eggy's

sizes up two new restaurants

Burger with pastrami,
Eggy sauce and an egg

!!! Eggy's

333 E. Benton Place 773-234-3449

Sometimes a great burger can be hard to find. In the case of recently opened Eggy's, it is actually the restaurant itself that can be tricky to locate. This new diner is in the Lakeshore East complex hidden away just north of Millennium Park, which one can find by following these instructions: Walk east on Randolph Street past the Aon Center, veer left at the sign for Village Market, descend to the lower level at the end of the plaza and then walk out onto the sidewalk to find Eggy's. To reward you upon arrival, the menu features two burgers: A classic hamburger ($9.50) as well as the Eggy's burger ($14.50), a double cheeseburger dressed with diner staples such as pastrami and a fried egg.

The burger: Eggy's cooks its peppery patties to medium-well, but they remained plenty juicy enough for my taste. I do appreciate the fine craft of a hand-packed patty, but more attention could be paid to the uneven shape. After all, there is nothing more disappointing than one's last few bites being all bun and no beef. This issue is compounded in the case of the Eggy's burger, as two irregularly shaped patties do not make a sound stack.

The bun: A classic egg bun is just thick enough to support the basic burger, but on the bigger Eggy's burger, the bottom bun is crushed into submission.

The fixings: On the classic hamburger, I was delighted to find especially thin wisps of sliced onion and discs of sweet heirloom tomato. A generous smear of mayonnaise-based, relish-dotted Eggy sauce negates the need for ketchup or mustard, or even cheese for that matter. The Eggy's burger, on the other hand, is no question indulgent but suffers from insurmountable structural issues. Besides the aforementioned uneven patty problem, a wad of pastrami and fried egg make grasping this behemoth a slippery endeavor. I had no choice but to cast aside the shredded lettuce, tomato and onion on the top in an attempt to keep it all together.

Everything else: For a side dish, one has the choice of a side salad (I never), chips (warm from the fryer) or, for $1 more, a tin cup of crispy hand-cut fries (worth the up-charge for fry fans). Soda fountain classics such as milkshakes and ice cream floats ($5.50) make proper sidekicks. There are few establishments these days serving the classic egg cream ($3.50), and though the anomaly that this creamy seltzer drink is made with neither egg nor cream has plagued me eternally, I cannot deny that the maple version provides a pleasantly sweet counterpoint to the salty burger.

The bottom line: The signature Eggy's burger could benefit from some tinkering, but there is little to improve upon when it comes to the simple hamburger.

Cheeseburger with beef bacon at Indie Burger
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE PHOTOS

Indie Burger

1034 W. Belmont Ave. 773-857-7777

Despite this sudden hipness of handlebar mustaches, The Great Burgerelli has never been one of the cool kids. At Indie Burger, a new counter-service eatery in Lakeview, indie rock and independent business practices intersect in the realm of hamburgers. While fellow burger lovers perused the concert posters on the wall and read up about the restaurant's organic commitment, I set my sights on the burgers themselves.

The burger: A one-third-pound patty is, indeed, made with organic beef, and in this case, the quality of the meat is discernible. Properly seasoned and cooked through, the burger retains its juiciness but does not veer into treacherous greasy territory. After a few bites of this premium patty, I'm beginning to see that the grass-fed fuss isn't just a marketing tactic.

The bun: Baked locally by those tattooed ruffians at Bleeding Heart, the plump, golden bun is unlike most I have encountered. It is indeed fluffy, but somehow still stands up to the juicy patty and plentiful toppings. A lightly buttered and toasted underside helps it stay intact from first to final bite.

The fixings: The regular cheeseburger ($7.99) arrives with a colorful collage of ingredients. Vibrant green lettuce, onion, ketchup, crunchy crinkle-cut pickles, aioli and one's choice of cheese align harmoniously while still retaining their distinct flavors. The signature Indie burger ($7.99), however, is a rather unappealing muddle of brownish toppings, including an indistinguishable horseradish-chipotle "Indie Sauce," which coats a heap of over-grilled onions and swiss cheese. Although I fail to fathom how any of the patrons clad in skinny jeans could squeeze in extra meatiness, beef bacon can be added for an additional $1.99.

Everything else: The Great Burgerelli does indeed appreciate good onion rings as an alternative to traditional french fries, but the tempura batter on these specimens ($3.50) is disappointingly doughy and under-seasoned. I strongly suggest ordering a small order of the standard, thick-cut fries ($2.50), which leaves just enough room for a birch beer float ($4.99) made with a pinkish, fizzy soda that seems to me a novel hybrid of root beer and cream soda.

Bottom line: Some of Indie Burger's so-called indie choices—such as using organic beef and partnering with Bleeding Heart for the buns—do, in fact, rock. Others, such as the squishy onion rings and messy Indie Burger toppings, hit a sour note.

THE GREAT BURGERELLI IS A FEARLESS SEEKER OF FINE BURGERS. SEND HIM IDEAS FOR HIS NEXT BURGER ADVENTURE AT GBURGERELLI@TRIBUNE.COM.

HIGH-STYLE VALUE

Raleigh Detour City Sport DL

Aluminum frame bike with internal 8-speed hub. $930; raleighusa.com

Likes: Looks great and leaves almost nothing out. Fenders, derailleur-free Shimano Alfine internal 8-Speed, rear rack, 3-watt generator light, suspension seat post, disk brakes, kickstand—even a bell. A chain guard keeps your pants oil-free. The lower-end City Sport model ($820) has the same frame and most features; it lacks a generator light and has a conventional derailleur-style drivetrain with 21-speed Shimano Acera gearing.

Dislikes: No taillight.

ELECTRIC-ASSIST BLISS

Trek FX +

Flat-bar aluminum-framed bike with rack-mounted lithium-ion battery that powers a motor in the rear hub, and an on-the-fly recharging system. $2,679; trekbikes.com

Likes: As with any electric-assist bike system that kicks in the motor only if you're pedaling, the FX+ can get you to work without you breaking a sweat. The 350-watt engine is very peppy. The battery can be removed for fitness riding. It can be recharged at any wall outlet or while pedaling, coasting downhill and braking if you press a button on the on-board dashboard. The front and rear lights go on automatically, the carbon-fiber fork smooths the ride, and a heavy-duty kickstand keeps the bike clean and unscratched.

Dislikes: Front fender must be purchased separately; no disk brakes.

SMOOTH RIDES

Chicago Tribune

Gasoline is more than $4 a gallon, and you know what that means: A lot more people than just college professors and DUI offenders are going to be interested in bike commuting. They'll find everything from high-end electric-assist bikes to bare-bones models, all with fast-rolling 700C road-bike wheels, upright positioning and clever convenience and safety features designed to help reduce the work of pedaling to work.

BARE-BONES

Breezer Greenway

Aluminum-framed 21-speed bike designed for trekking (long-distance riding) with built-in mounting points for future upgrades. $499; breezerbikes.com

Likes: Inexpensive and effective for those who don't need fenders, racks and a generator lighting system but want the option for down the road. Breezer, considered a commuter bike leader, gives this model the same comfy, upright frame found on its loaded Liberty model. Shimano's Tourney group provides plenty of gear range for fast cruising speed and hill climbing, be it for commuting, recreation or fitness. A kickstand and minimal chain-ring guard are included.

Dislikes: None.

BELT-DRIVE BONANZA

REI Novara Gotham

Steel-framed bike with an infinite-gear, internally shifting rear hub and a fabric belt instead of a chain. $1,299; rei.com/novara

Likes: Super comfort, cleanliness and idiot-proof efficiency. The S-bend "Mustache" handlebar puts you in an upright position that lets you see traffic well and is also great for climbing hills. The innovative drivetrain, featuring a twist-shifter-activated NuVinci rear hub and a fabric belt, brings an end to the days of mis-shifting and dropped, greasy chains soiling your pant legs. Includes fenders, disk brakes, kickstand, and front and rear generator lights that are always on when you move. A small triangular gap formed by the tubes coming together at the seat-tube is ideal for lugging the bike up and down stairways.

Dislikes: No quick-release mechanism on the rear hub means you must carry a wrench to take the wheel off to fix a flat.

What if I make more money?

Dear Anna: I make considerably more money than my boyfriend. He makes a decent living too but hasn't been nearly as ambitious in his career as I have been and has talked about wanting a new job for years. He says it doesn't bother him that I make more, but I think it does. I know he wouldn't want his friends to know and he still insists on paying for things. How can I make him feel better about this?

— Money problems

Anna Pulley

» redeye@tribune.com

Anna says:

If he wants to pay for things and you know it's not going to, for instance, bankrupt your future children's college education fund, let him pay. It doesn't have to be a big deal, especially if he makes a "decent living," as you said. Emphasizing the financial disparity in your relationship over and over will only breed resentment. I never have much moolah, but I like to do nice things for people I date. It makes me happy to take someone out for Froyo or for a Bloomin Onion at Outback.

I'd bet that it makes your boyfriend feel good to foot the bill even if you're winning most of the bread. Has he actually expressed resentment or ill-will about the hella scrilla you make or are you going off assumptions? If so, then you should sit down and have an honest conversation about needs and expectations, because these are concerns that are not actually about money. Also, why would he tell his friends how much each of you make? Do men get together and brag about how much more money they make than their girlfriends? If so, that would really explain a lot about the persistence of the wage gap.

Focus instead on what he does contribute to your relationship, not what he doesn't. And on how you can both be there for each other. Money can't be the sole basis for equality in a relationship. As I've said before, money doesn't tell you a damn thing about someone's worth. If you treat each other with admiration and respect, and show how much you appreciate each other, then money shouldn't be the wedge that drives you apart. Dollars and sense, you know?

RICHARD MADDEN:

Richard Madden knows how lucky he is that "Game of Thrones" executive producers David Benioff and Dan Weiss didn't follow George R.R. Martin's "A Song of Ice and Fire" books exactly for Season 2 of the HBO hit.

If they had, he would not have been in it. His character, Robb Stark, would not be arguing with his mother, defeating the Lannisters in battle or, maybe most importantly,

ROMANCE IN WESTEROS?

'GAME OF THRONES' ACTORS TEASE STORYLINES FROM SEASON 2

KIT HARINGTON:

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

» cwwagner@tribune.com
» @showpatrol

In just four years, Kit Harington has gone from fledgling actor to one of the leading men in the HBO hit "Game of Thrones."

It's given the 25-year-old Brit, who before the show starred in the original West End production of "War Horse," opportunities such as the upcoming film "The Seventh Son," in which he stars with Jeff Bridges and Julianne Moore, worldwide fame and the chance to travel from Ireland to Iceland to film the series.

Now in his second season playing Jon Snow, a Brother of the Night's Watch who guards the realm against threats from the north, Harington also had the opportunity to do something he hasn't done since early in Season 1: act opposite a woman.

"It's really enjoyable," he said, laughing. "It was nice to work with someone who's not a bloke. As much as I love working with the guys."

Beginning with Sunday's episode, "The Ghost of Harrenhal," Jon and the Brothers continue their journey beyond the Wall fortress to stop the advance of a wildling army. Jon eventually meets a wildling woman named Ygritte (played by Rose Leslie, who Harington says is "absolutely brilliant.") Harington said Ygritte confounds Jon.

"He's always got a very masculine presence around him. So when he meets a woman, he just doesn't know how to deal with her," he said. "He never really interacted with women before, other than his younger sisters, which isn't really the same thing."

Sounds to me like romantic sparks might warm things up for Jon, but Harington wouldn't reveal any more about the relationship.

The upcoming episode also is the first that was filmed on location in Iceland, including on the country's largest glacier, Vatnajökull. Harington said the frozen landscapes of Iceland were "perfect" for the wilderness beyond the Wall.

"It looks incredible on-screen," he said. "It is very, very cold, but beautiful. It was a -35C wind chill. But it's very much the landscape he's supposed to be going into."

meeting the woman of his dreams.

"It was a huge compliment for me that David and Dan kind of believed in what I was doing enough to allow that to happen and me to run with it," said Madden, 26. "It's allowed me to do scenes that no one has seen because they weren't in the books. So I was very thankful and very pleased."

Last week's episode gave the Scottish actor another chance to interpret the character in his own way when Robb met Talisa (Oona Chaplin), a healer helping the injured on the battlefield. The King in the North was instantly smitten.

This being "Game of Thrones," the romance also gave Madden a chance to ditch Robb's heavy costumes of leather, furs and armor.

"Umm, without spoiling it, I think you're going to see Robb wearing less armor than normal," he said, laughing. "How's that?"

The Killers in 2008. Saxophonist Thomas Marth, not pictured, committed suicide this week. AP FILE

Killers saxophonist commits suicide

LOS ANGELES A saxophonist for The Killers died earlier this week at his Las Vegas home from a self-inflicted gunshot wound to his head, a spokeswoman for the Clark County Coroner said Thursday.

Thomas “Tommy” Marth, 33, who played saxophone on live tours with The Killers between 2008 and 2010 and on their albums “Sam’s Town” and “Day & Age,” was found dead Monday.

His death has been ruled a suicide by officials in Clark County, Nev.

“Last night we lost our friend Thomas Marth. Our prayers are with his family. There’s a light missing in Las Vegas tonight.

“Travel well, Tommy,” The Killers posted on Twitter.

The Killers, made up of lead singer Brandon Flowers, guitarist Dave Keuning, bassist Mark Stoermer and drummer Ronnie Vannucci, rose to fame in 2004 with their debut album “Hot Fuss,” and have gained global success with singles such as “Mr Brightside” and “When We Were Young.” REUTERS

It's about time—watches are back

MCT

Move over, iPhone. The wristwatch is back.

A wave of statement-making timepieces has renewed interest in this classic men's accessory. A vintage gold Rolex or a modern Devon Works Tread with conveyor belts not only tells time—it tells you something about the man wearing it.

Since cellphones and other gadgets became popular timekeepers, watches have lost some of their luster. But thanks to the timepiece's retro appeal and new bold designs, style-conscious men are giving them a boost—as a fashion accessory. They were strapped to the wrists of male models strutting the runways at February's New York Fashion Week, and the Federation of the Swiss Watch Industry reports watch sales in 2011 were the highest in 20 years.

Tim Paulsen of Pacifica, Calif., is happy to see the return of the timepiece.

"I'm glad to see people interested in them because maybe now I'll be able to see them in more storefronts," he says.

Paulsen, who works for a pharmaceutical company, owns 72 pieces, including a $400 limited-edition white Casio G-Shock with a red ticker, a submarine-inspired Italo Fontana U-boat Flightdeck chronograph for $4,000, and a titanium, 60-mm-faced Panerai PAM 341 that cost him $22,000, he says.

"I build my clothes around my watch," says Paulsen, 35. "It's like my purse."

The trend crosses all price points, from more common labels, such as Timex and Tommy Hilfiger, to luxury brands, like Rolex and Tag Heuer. Sales of watches up to $300 increased 22 percent from 2010 to 2011, while those priced $300 to $1,000 increased 25 percent, according to LGI Networks, a market research company that tracks the industry. And the Swatch Group and Fossil both increased production on their wallet-friendly men's fashion watches after seeing sales increase by at least 40 percent last year.

ARRIVING IN OTTAWA DURING CANADA DAY CELEBRATIONS
JULY "When arriving in a foreign country, one must try not to wear an overstated hat. But did you notice I dressed in your colors? So chic. Why, yes, Wills and I ARE appearing on the new season of 'Downton Abbey,' we're just practicing our winsome gazes."

AT A BAFTA EVENT IN L.A. DURING THEIR AMERICAN TOUR
JULY "Yes, hello, hello America. No, I'm not a film actress, but it's TERRIBLY kind of you to think so. Perhaps next year."

BEING MADE HONORARY MEMBERS OF THE CANADIAN RANGERS
JULY "Wills, are you trying to grasp my bosom? Do not get fresh with me at foreign summer camp or I'll turn you over to the Mounties. They may not have guns, but I overheard something about poutine, which sounds positively miserable."

AT THE WEDDING OF ZARA PHILLIPS
JULY "Is it true she's marrying a rugby player? How terribly common. Oh, Wills, I believe I've scorched a few people with the reflection from my hat, can you run 'round and see? Terrible vantage point from under here."

IN A DRAGON BOAT RACE FOR CANADA DAY
JULY "Sirs, these waters look a mite choppy, I'm not really sure this is my scene. Can someone watch my diamond?"

FAIREST OF THEM ALL

After all, Kate Middleton IS a duchess—she'd better have a pretty great wardrobe

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Try as she might, Catherine, the duchess of Cambridge, has yet to break through to princess status. But a year after her wedding to Prince William (their anniversary is Sunday), she's gotten to trot out some pretty fancy outfits. But because this is RedEye, we're more interested in the absurd ones. Check out a year in Catherine's, er, less-than-royal attire—with a few classy goodies thrown in for good measure—and what we think she'd have to say about it. AT THE CALGARY STAMPEDE DURING THEIR CANADIAN TOUR
JULY "Ooo, Wills! Have you checked out my bum in these? This rodeo is quite smashing—and I still get to wear a precious hat!"

MADAME TUSSAUDS UNVEILING IN ENGLAND
APRIL 2012 "Look, it's me, I'm forever 29! Oh fine, it's wax, but you really can't tell, can you?"

PLANTING A TREE AT A CHILDREN'S HOSPICE
MARCH "Well, yes, I've got a platform to stand upon, but I'm really doing just as much work as a normal house gardener. Wait ... is that a woorm?"

VISITING LONDON'S OLYMPIC PARK
MARCH "Mother did always say I had a steely eye. Well, that's what it takes to become a royal. Please note how my hair manages to look PERFECT even in sporting situations."

VISITING THE DULWICH PICTURE GALLERY IN LONDON
MARCH "Ooo Charles, you old flirt, I will not iron your drawers for you! Get Camilla on the job!"

What the Smurf?!

Look out, Katy Perry! There's a "Smurfs" sequel in the works, and it will feature a little blue character named Vexy, an evil version of the female Smurf voiced by Perry, thr.com reports. Christina Ricci will voice the catty new character. That is some Smurfed-up Smurf right there.

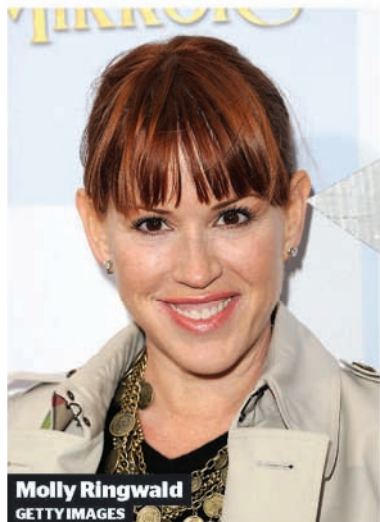

Potty humor

Ke$ha don't care about no public urination laws. The pop star taunted the "PoPo" and blamed traffic for having to go "pee pee" on the side of the road, and posted a photo of herself doing the deed to Twitter early Wednesday as evidence, nydailynews.com reports. Um, gross.

THE DIGIT

$12.5 MILLION

That's how much "The Avengers" already has made in overseas markets, according to thr.com. The superhero flick drops May 4 in the U.S.

What do Justin Bieber, Lady Gaga and Tim Burton have in common? They're all aliens. Well, they'll make cameos as aliens in "Men in Black III," which drops May 25, director Barry Sonnenfeld tells collider.com. Even if it were true, we can't say it would come as a total shock.

Celebrity row

You'd think most of the big names at the White House Correspondents' Dinner would be either journalists (like, correspondents, maybe) or politicians, right? But People reports that this year a tabloid full of celebs such as George Clooney and Josh Hutcherson will join the list, courtesy of media invites. Fox News is burning not one but two slots on Lindsay Lohan (courtesy of Greta Van Susteren) and Kim Kardashian. Distinguished!
